

active transport (in biology)

The carriage of a solute across a biological membrane from low to high concentration which requires the expenditure of (metabolic) energy.

1992, 64, 145