

capillary column (in chromatography)

A general term for columns having a small diameter. A capillary column may contain a packing or have the stationary phase supported on its inside wall. The former case corresponds to packed capillary column while the latter case corresponds to an open-tubular column. Due to the ambiguity of this term its use without an adjective is discouraged.

1993, 65, 831