

ion source (in mass spectrometry)

Generally an assembly composed of: (i) an ionization chamber in which a stream of electrons flows from a hot filament across a stream of gas to collector (the potential between filament and collector is usually between 50 and 70 V); (ii) a device for the acceleration of these ions.

1990, 62, 2200