

open-tubular column (in chromatography)

A column, usually having a small diameter, in which either the inner tube wall, or a liquid or active solid held stationary on the tube wall acts as the stationary phase and there is an open, unrestricted path for the mobile phase.

1993, 65, 831; O.B. 97